

Leadership Expert Leads the Way for NWCA Coaches

By Dean Donley

I spent six of the longest years of my life working for an Internet company. The running joke between my office mate and me was to sit in front of our high powered computers with ten windows of various internet sites open on the screen and say something like "Hey John, do you know what the weather is going to be like in about 15 minutes?" John would reply "Geez, if we only had a way to find that out right here from our desks without actually looking out the window." Then we would race each other to weather.com to get the hourly forecast for the weather outside of our cube. OK, obviously we did not have enough to do, but the point is that the Internet is good for some things, while clearly overkill for others. Where the heck was I going with this? Oh yeah, a good buddy of mine over at the National Wrestling Coaches Association (NWCA), code name "Otis", called me a couple months back suggesting that I enroll in the NWCA's leadership development course.
