Camp Focus: We will focus on core skills and 'necessities' from our feet as well as the bottom position. During the 3 day camp, we will focus on common positions that all wrestlers find themselves in, both good and bad. This means scoring and finishing after an opponents sprawl, finishing bad positions, scoring from an opponents collar tie, defending deep leg attacks, etc. I'm a believer in becoming an expert at finishing tough positions, and defending tough positions. In time, and as the kids develop, they will find themselves in 'tough' spots less and less, but in the mean time I personally want the kids winning, and learning how to wrestle in all the tough positions in our sport, just like we see college wrestlers do. Additionally, My approach from the bottom position will be a bit different than most are used too, so I think the kids attending will take a more logical approach to the bottom position than they typically do, and be able to hold position much more than they are currently able to do.
